National Webinar on "Hyperledger Fabric-IBM Blockchain Framework" 20/06/2020, Saturday

A national webinar was conducted by Information Technology & Computer Science for all faculties in different colleges of India on the topic "Hyperledger Fabric-IBM Blockchain Framework". Hyperledger Fabric was initiated by Digital Asset and IBM and has now emerged as a collaborative cross-industry venture, which is currently being hosted by the Linux Foundation.

The attendees from different colleges were very eager to know about the framework. It was an interactive session, many of the attendees asked many questions and all of them were clarified.

The takeaways from the webinar are

- Hyperledger is an enterprise-grade, open-sourced distributed ledger framework launched by the Linux Foundation in December 2015.
- Fabric is a highly-modular, decentralized ledger technology (DLT) platform that was designed by IBM for industrial enterprise use.
- Because Hyperledger Fabric is private and requires permission to access, businesses can segregate information (like prices), plus transactions can be sped up because the number of nodes on the network is reduced.
- Fabric 2.0 was released in January 2020. The main features of this version are faster transactions, updated smart contract technology, and streamlined data sharing.

The Hyperledger Fabric is a permissioned blockchain platform aimed at business use. It is open-source and based on standards, runs user-defined smart contracts, supports strong security and identity features, and uses a modular architecture with pluggable consensus protocols. The fabric is currently evolving and being actively developed under the governance of the Hyperledger Project.
